Under Pressure

Next to the brakes, your tires are the most important safety devices on your car. Incorrect tire pressure will compromise cornering, braking and stability. And in the worst-case scenario, improper tire pressure can lead to tire failure — and a serious accident. In order to achieve optimum handling, from everyday driving to making emergency maneuvers, tire pressure needs to be at the proper inflation level. According to a study (www.tc.gc.ca), about 50% of the vehicles on the road have at least one tire that is either under or overinflated by more than 10%. In fact, 10% of all vehicles surveyed had at least one tire under inflated by 20%. This represents a real safety issue.
